Door Hangers. The communist regime reinforced these trends of national union, homogenization and centralization, while institutionalizing Romanian nationalism - via a classification of ethnic citizenship BrubakerThe latter was used in favour or, on the contrary, against some groups, such as Jews or Roma BrubakerMoreover, the Romanian national historiographies stressed the narratives presenting Romanians as being the victims of other nations Verdery- a victimization process that prevented collective accountability Capelle-PogaceanThe fall of the communist regime led to a loss of identity reference points, and opened the way for the use of myths about origins, of the Romanian national memory Mihailescu85as well as to the rise of nationalism and anti-Semitic trends FlorianIndeed, the political discourse in post-communist Romania seems to still be focused on the nation and its characteristics Capelle-PogaceanIndeed, in Romania it was portrayed that the Holocaust was only a result of external causes and not inherent to the Romanian state; a concept deeply linked to the nationalistic communism in Romania, whereby all problems had foreign causes FlorianIn contemporary Romania, the denial of the Holocaust still occupies an important part of public belief FlorianThis denial is visible in mass-media and TV shows Eskenazy10but also in more subtle ways.
